Perspectives on religion

From inside: what religious beliefs or practices should I adhere to as someone aware of the mysteries of life and death?

From outside:

- Religious studies: what are the practices, beliefs and histories of the many different world religions?
- Sociology: how do religions work as institutions expressing shared values and social meaning?
- Psychology: what is going on in the mind when people have religious beliefs and engage in religious practices?
- Philosophy: can religious beliefs be rationally justified?

Does God exist?

10

Theism is the general term for the belief in the existence of a God or gods.

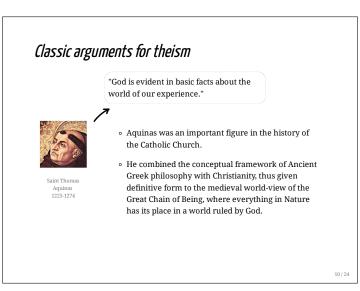

MAYBE

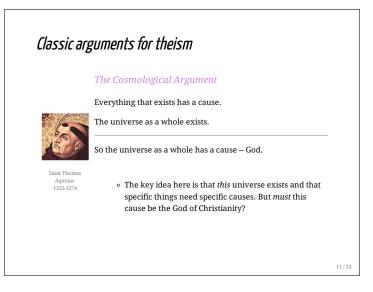

- Monotheism: there is only one God, and that God is a being with "personhood," with thoughts, feelings, intentions, free will...
- Polytheism: there are multiple gods often with many different personalities.
- o Pantheism: God is everywhere or in every thing.

NO Note that actual religions don't always clearly fit these definitions. MAYBE Note that actual religions don't always clearly fit these definitions. Hinduism is polytheistic, but Krishna is often seen as the main "God" with many other divinities as Krishna's "avatars" or manifestations. Christianity claims that God is both unitary and has three separate "persons" – Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Atheism refers to the denial of the existence of God, the gods or a supernatural realm of spirits. MAYBE It is sometimes, asserted that it it impossible to "prove a negative," or demonstrate that something does not exist or is not true. But we do this all the time, whenever we show that the existence of something entails a contradiction, or is logically incompatible with other things we know to be true.

Classic arguments for theism

The Ontological Argument

We can imagine the existence of a perfect being.

But if such a being did not exist it would lack something and so be less than perfect.

Thus a perfect being must exist -- God.

1033-1101 • Something seems fishy here, but it is hard to see what.

 Can such abstract reasoning do more than just restate our original assumption that we can imagine such a being?

Classic arguments for theism

"The hand of God is visible in the complexity of the natural world."

William Paley 1743-1805

- William Paley was an Anglican minister whose "natural theology" was taken to be the best explanation for biological complexity until Darwin challenged it.
- His argument is still popular among Christian fundamentalists who use it to oppose evolution.

14 / 24

Classic arguments for theism

Paley's Watch

If you found a watch on the beach you'd be right to think it was not a product of chance but of design.

The organisms we "find" in nature are even more complex than a watch.

William Paley

Thus a designer powerful enough to have designed biological organisms must exist – God.

 This argument fails to mention other possible explanations for biological complexity, like the "blind watchmaker" of evolution by natural selection.

Faith and the limits of reason

- None of these arguments seem so convincing to modern readers.
- Perhaps the Eighteenth Century philosopher Immanuel Kant was right that these kinds of big metaphysical questions cannot be answered in any

Atheism and the problem of evil

"The existence of evil proves that God does not exist."

Epicurus 341-270 BCE

- Epicurus was a Greek philosopher who was skeptical of religion and advocated enjoying life to the fullest.
- He argued against religious belief in an era when it was almost universally accepted.

17/24

Atheism and the problem of evil

The Argument from Evil

If there is an all-powerful, all-knowing and all-good God, then evil should not exist.

But evil does exist.

Thus such a God does not exist.

picurus

- One typical response to this argument is to blame evil on human free will – we would be at fault then, and not God.
- Can this defense deal with "natural evils" like disease or natural disasters without blaming the victim?

Belief and uncertainty

"We are all compelled to gamble."

Blaise Pascal 1623-1662

- Blaise Pascal was deeply religious, but also a mathematician and gambler who laid the foundations of probability theory.
- Pascal offers an argument in defense of belief in God that assumes that we cannot know for sure whether or not God exists.

Belief and uncertainty

Pascal's Wager

There is no direct evidence for or against God's existence.

But the risk of not believing is far worse than that of believing.

Thus we should accept that God exists.

 This argument may show that we have a motive to believe in avoiding punishment for unbelief if God turns out to exist, but is that really a reason to think the conclusion is true?

Buddhism

"What we believe about ultimate questions is less important than how we live."

4th Century BC

 Born Siddhartha Gautama, heir to a royal family, the founder of Buddhism sought a solution to the human suffering that inevitably arises from the impermanence of everything and our tendency to cling to things anyway.

 Buddhism spread throughout Asia and now takes a multitude of forms, but all emphasize self-discipline and not being too attached to things in the world.

Buddhism

The Parable of the Arrow

Argiung about God, the universe and the soul is like arguing about who exactly just shot you with an arrow and why.

Likewise with religion, dealing with human suffering not the ultimate nature of things should be the focus.

 Is Buddhism even a religion or instead a philosophical, ethical or agnostic spiritual system? That is not clear and maybe does not matter so much...
